

5 Best Places for Digital Nomads - Get Out of the Office

Introduction

In recent years, people from all walks of life are now starting to realise that there are many more opportunities out there in the real world to develop, grow, and earn more money from doing things that they enjoy and are passionate about.

They can now see that they don't have to spend hours, days, weeks, even years working in unfulfilling and stressful jobs working for someone else and getting low pay.

And they are barely earning enough to pay their bills and rent, that they don't even have enough to enjoy themselves and live their lives.

The fact that you are working for someone else restricts you and your life as you are not in control of your future or circumstances.

But now, we have the opportunity to work for ourselves as digital nomads. Once we are making money from the businesses that we create, we can travel to any destination at any time.

We can work from anywhere in the world as and when we choose to.

However, it will take time to build the necessary skills to become a successful Digital Nomad.

If you have skills that are in demand, you can name your price and work remotely from anywhere we choose.

Digital Nomads are self-employed with skills in Blogging, coaching or consulting.

If you enjoy travelling and being your own boss, then becoming a Digital Nomad will be one of the best opportunities you can look into.

Here we will talk about five of the best destinations you should visit if you choose to work as a digital nomad.

1. France

France is much more than just about visiting Paris. Usually, when people think of France, Paris is always at the front of their minds.

And it is true that Paris, as the country's capital city, is a very popular tourist destination. But there is so much more to France than just Paris.

There are many different regions in France, each with its own unique culture and attractions.

There is so much beautiful scenery to experience and enjoy, including the French Alps' snowy mountains.

Aside from the abundance of cultural experiences available, France is also renowned for its excellent social life, activities, and laid-back work-life balance that puts relaxation well above stress and chasing success.

You will need to brush up on your French language skills but once you gain confidence with your interactions and social skills, you will be provided with some unforgettable moments.

You will never be short of finding things to do and destinations to travel to and finding accommodation will be relatively easy with:

- The average cost in rent (1 bedroom, city center): $1200 per month
- The average cost for a cup of coffee will set you back: $3.40

Working as a digital nomad will never be so exquisite when building your businesses while travelling the beautiful landscapes of the French countryside.

2. Thailand

Thailand is a very popular place to work abroad as It is one of the cheapest places for digital nomads to live in the world.

Accommodation is very affordable and is easy to find, and Thai people are generally friendly and welcoming of foreigners.

There are some truly breathtaking sites and scenery to be seen all over the countryside and cityscapes of Thailand.

Nomads can choose from the thrilling city life of Bangkok or relax with the laid-back island living in popular hotspots like Koh Samui or Phuket.

You'll have strong Wi-Fi wherever you go so there will be no need to worry about getting work done.

Having a tourist visa can allow for up to a 6-month stay with the possibility to renew if needed and the process isn't too difficult.

Not all accommodation and amenities are of a first-world living standard compared to other countries but it has a very good infrastructure and is simple enough to get around easily and live comfortably.

- Average rent cost (1 bedroom, city center): $476 per month
- The average cost for a cup of coffee: $1.99

3. Switzerland

Switzerland is known to be quite expensive to live in but has an abundance of offers available from clean and safe cities, high paying jobs and employment, excellent infrastructure, great social and night scene and a high standard of healthcare.

Switzerland uses four official languages (English is not a native language), so it can be difficult to understand and navigate signage when travelling.

Holidaymakers could find it difficult to adjust to the Swiss people's reserved, private social style.

But there are plenty of opportunities to get out and explore where your time can be spent exploring the Swiss Alps, travelling using the excellent transportation systems, and learning a new language (which will help you communicate while getting to make new friends).

Switzerland has some of the most beautiful scenery, from lush and lavish forests to vast mountains and cityscapes that will leave you in awe of the vast landscapes you will experience on your travels.

- The average cost of rent (1 bedroom, city center) is: $1,646 per month
- The average cost for a cup of coffee is: $5.02

4. Uruguay

Uruguay is an excellent place for people looking to move to the sunny landscapes of South America.

You might be concerned about safety but rest assured as Uruguay has a relatively stable economy and political system.

It's also one of the most socially liberal countries in South America and is quite open to people from different backgrounds and orientations.

The work-life balance is commonplace in Latin countries, focusing on less pressure working yourself to death and more time to enjoy life.

Uruguay also has a rich history and heritage with great scenes and historical landmarks to visit.

It also has a place in history as the first country ever to win the World Cup in the globalised and iconic football/soccer tournament held worldwide every four years.

Digital Nomads could be surprised to find that the standard of living isn't exactly low-cost.

You will need to understand the Spanish language as many people don't speak English.

It is quite a hot country with temperatures soaring through the day, but you can bathe in the glorious sunshine if you can enjoy and cope with the hot weather.

- The average cost of rent (1 bedroom, city center) is: $425 per month
- The average cost for a cup of coffee is: $2.58

5. Germany

Germany is a notoriously efficient and productive country that offers so much to the thriving and expanding global economy.

You will also be surprised to understand that the citizens prioritise an excellent work-life balance.

Germany has a very stable economy with great social systems and a very high standard of healthcare.

Taxes are expensive but for a very good reason, as it is mostly used to fund the available social systems.

Germany also boasts a vast infrastructure to explore, with some of the best public transport systems available in any major city in the world.

Being a Digital Nomad in Germany will provide you with plenty of opportunities to discover all the unique nuances and heritage of this dynamic and culture-rich country.

It is in the middle ground of the cost of living but is affordable with easy access to amenities and travel destinations.

- The average cost of rent (1 bedroom, city center) is: $884 per month
- The average cost for a cup of coffee is: $3.30

Is the digital nomad lifestyle for you?

The lifestyle of a digital nomad looks extravagant, but it is hard work and requires a lot of time and effort to see your input come to fruition.

Breaking into freelancing and learning new skills, there are obstacles you will face working as a digital nomad.

But there are plenty of ways to get started, even if you don't have any experience.

But you can work on your craft in an environment where you feel more comfortable, relaxed and happy.

Working in a space that allows you to get work done and feel relaxed can empower you to take on the world and overcome any obstacles that stand in your way.

Moving abroad and staying away from home does come with its own set of challenges as there will be language barriers, not to mention becoming aware of your new environments and surroundings.

But it will be worthwhile because of the independence you'll achieve and the growth you will gain along your journeys.

You will be able to find a balance that will provide a structure so you can focus on building your business or side hustle in a fun and friendly environment that you feel comfortable in.

You will take on new adventures and discover new experiences that could force you to rethink going home.

Is it a concept you would be interested in? If so, then you have nothing to lose.